Mr. Keating, with undergraduate degrees in English & History from Bucknell University and a master's in comparative literature from Columbia University, has been teaching English and writing since 1981 and has taught at the Pingry School over 35 years. Keating's teaching styles are working closely with his students on their writing & oral expression, and inspiring students to love literature and language. At Pingry, he has won numerous teaching awards and has had the entranceway of the school named in his honor.

The camp will focus on all aspects of the writing process, including building vocabulary, grammar, mechanics, and usage. Students will learn how to formulate a thesis statement and develop strong arguments. In addition, they will participate in exercises designed to expand and deepen their knowledge of cultural literacy, with a particular emphasis on the arts and humanities.

Throughout the camp, dedicated time will be allocated to reviewing and revising written work, as well as engaging in group discussions to explore the ideas contained within the students' essays. Furthermore, students will have the opportunity to present their work to the class, highlighting various elements such as their thesis, supporting arguments, and relevant evidence. These presentations will help students develop and sharpen their oral communication and public speaking skills.

By providing a comprehensive approach to writing, this camp aims to foster students' overall writing proficiency and enhance their ability to express themselves effectively.
